The dam at Spartansburg seven miles above Titusville, burst under the flood pressure-caused by the late heavy rains late on Saturday night, and very soon the swellen waters of Off Creek were rushing through the streets in the lower part of the city with seeming resistless force, while from house to house windows and driftwood piles located directly in the midst of the torrent came tesceching walls and screams of anguish of distress from the helpless victims all imploring aid.

Brave men with boats and ropes battled manfully against the territic current, and hundreds of captives were brought safely to land, while others perished.

THEN THE PIRE.

Five persons, all males, were seen to perish while grasping a piece of timber. Just as the thousands of spectators who were looking on with bated breath, unable to render the slightest assistance, were led to believe that the sufferers would safely reach land a neighboring tank of oil exploded in close were enveloped in flames, and death came speedily to relieve their sufferings, their bodies being at once swallowed in raging, Burning off flowed out upon the surface of
